Outside St Augustine's, where a minority of those killed are buried, the killers are not the only legacy. Their legacy has been scattered across the 'creeping city'. There are marked locations, some of which are still in private ownership. These locations include Fountain Avenue, which was renamed Hillview Avenue, where the first shot was fired, Calhoun Street, where the worst loss of life occurred, and President Street, where the second shooting took place. For people who live on Hillview Avenue, these places are reminders of the tragedy. "They are so close to my home," says Ms MacDougall. "I'm scared that something might happen again." In my current research, I did not discover anything new, so I am really looking for a different research idea. But in order to do so, I need a little more time and I need the data I need from my advisor. This data is actually interesting to him.
